The discovery of evolutionary ancient proteins (EALPs) constituted a watershed event in bioinformatics. These proteins represent the oldest forms of proteins known to science. In addition, they have implications for understanding the origin of life on Earth and the first appearance of modern proteins in primordial oceans. While many EALPs possess biochemical properties characteristic of enzymes, the molecular mechanisms behind EALP's function remain unclear. We report here the discovery of a diverse network of metal-binding sites in EALPs that might explain the biochemical activity of EALP's.The stages of conversion in the rat brain: effects of alteration of the hippocampus and the brain stem. Previous physiological studies showed that hippocampal and brain stem inputs can change the EEG in the deep sleep of the rat, a condition during which low-amplitude hippocampal theta and brain stem patterns predominate. We
