The Case of the "Spider Ghoul" "Spider-Man" fans around the world were thrilled when they heard the news that Toby Kebbell, star of the upcoming "Doctor Strange," would be playing the lead role in "The Spectacular Spider-Man." We've been waiting for this news for years, so naturally we were excited. However, when Kebbell was approached to join the cast, rumors started circulating that the actor had a bit of his own set of issues to handle. Christopher DeFaria, the actor playing Gwen Stacy, the love interest of Peter Parker, allegedly told a friend that Kebbell was a "practicing Satanist." According to the friend, DeFaria "thinks that Toby is a Satanist, and that's part of the reason he didn't want him in the movie." The friend then showed some photos of Kebbell at a recent family wedding that he shared on Instagram, and one of the photos showed him wearing a black spiral pendant. "Toby has a costume for his birthday party, and this is what he was wearing,” said the friend. “He didn’t tell me he was doing that — I told him to wear a suit and tie to the wedding, but he wanted to go with his sorcerer outfit, with a black goatee and the ring. That’s all we saw — we’ve been to the wedding a couple of times now, but we don’t know any more about him than that.” The “Spider-Man” franchise is full of outlandish characters. In addition to DeFaria’s story, a fan recently posted an article on a blog in which comedian Bob Martin stated that he was told that “Spidey” was the property of the Devil. To the surprise of fans, Martin said that he quickly learned from the production team that “Spidey” was “inspired by God” and that the characters were “very innocent.” In other words, there is a wide range of perceptions when it comes to the infamous “Spider-
